

18 MR. MAYNARD: I'm pleased to introduce our 19 next set of witnesses; Dr. James Byrne on my right, 20 Mr. Daniel Alejandrez, and Mr. Tony Delgado, who will 21 examine the role of gang affiliation and drug 22 trafficking and the prevalence of violence in prisons 23 and jails.

24 The link between gangs and violence in 25 prisons and jails is complicated. Some claim that

1 prison gangs use violence to maintain control and 2 coerce participation. Others contend that prison
3 gangs provide inmates with protection from other 4 inmates as well as staff. Still others argue that 5 gangs in prisons operate like businesses seeking to 6 control drug markets and therefore have little 7 incentive to increase violence in the facilities.
8 Our panel will explore gang violence by looking at 9 how the problem has been defined, what reasons 10 prisoners have to join gangs in correctional systems, 11 and some of the ways community-based organization can 12 preempt and respond to gang activity.

13 Dr. James Byrne is a professor of the 14 Department of Criminal Justice at the University of 15 Massachusetts-Lowell and has conducted research on 16 the cause, prevention and control of institutional 17 violence and disorder. Daniel Alejandrez is the 18 executive director of Barrios Unidos, a community-19 based peace movement targeting at-risk youth involved
20 with gangs. Anthony Delgado is the Security Threat
21 Group Investigation Coordinator at the Ohio
22 Department of Rehabilitation and Correction.

23 I would like to extend my thanks to each of 24 our panelists for being here today and we will begin 25 with Dr. Byrne.

1 DR. BYRNE: Thank you.

2 I want to start with just kind of picking
3 up on one of the comments earlier about gangs 4 being -- whether they were inevitable or not and 5 start my comments there.

6 My view is that I would not use that 7 sentence gangs are inevitable, but I would say 8 they're an inevitable consequence of a myriad of 9 problems individuals face in community settings and 10 to the extent that we have a prison gang violence 11 problem more at one institution than another, I think 12 it is a reflection of the extent of gang involvement 13 in those communities and so I just want to start with 14 that because that would be my take on it. An 15 interesting way to think about it is from where I 16 take it, start off from, is to think about what 17 exactly do gangs provide to individuals, both in 18 institutional and community settings; why do you join 19 a gang in the first place. I think you heard a 20 little of that in some of the earlier presentation, 21 and I have a by line by Mark Rydell and one of his 22 colleagues that I think highlights it.

23 Basically he argues that gangs' most 24 important role is to provide a source of identity to 25 young males and to a less extent female. Traveling

1 to high-crime neighborhoods, attending poor schools,
2 victims of racial and ethnic discrimination, gangs
3 provide a source of identity and pride to young 4 people who believe there are few other alternatives.

5 And the reason I start with that little 6 quote is I think we sometimes miss the most important 7 aspect of gang involvement and that is to provide 8 something very positive to individuals. We're 9 obviously talking about consequences of gang violence 10 in terms of prison violence and disorder, but I think 11 we need to think about that because if we talk about 12 solving the problem, we can think about alternatives 13 that can be provided and provide the same kind of 14 things that gangs do, so I would like to focus on 15 three things and one is just kind of inmate-centered
16 response. To what extent can we do different things 17 and organize different programs in prisons that will 18 focus on inmate issues. And I highlight some of the 19 work that's been done, you probably read some of it, 20 on the inmate-centered programs that focus on 21 restorative justice models and the idea that what we 22 need to think about is giving alternative mechanisms 23 to the formal system whereby people can bring 24 complaints to a group. And I like that conflict
25 resolution strategy, I like it in community settings,

1 a lot of community research into restorative justice, 2 I think it is fairly positive, and I would like to 3 see that kind of approach considered. It is one that 4 empowers inmates in terms of alternative problem-5 solving mechanisms, alternative to either giving into 6 gang threats or harassments or challenging that 7 situation directly as you heard earlier today,
8 so that's kind of an inmate-centered response that I 9 think should be put on the table when we talk about 10 this.

11 The second is the staff-centered response 12 and I'm involved as an evaluator for the National 13 Institute of Corrections of the program that they 14 have been running for several years now, but 15 certainly they have taken off in the last two or 16 three trying to change staff culture. Based on an 17 assumption that I put in the testimony I gave to you, 18 if you change staff culture, inmate culture will 19 follow. When you cut to the chase on this, you say 20 what are you trying to change about staff, I think 21 you are talking about not only staff attitudes but 22 staff behavior towards inmates, and that's a very 23 difficult thing to change and we're trying it in 24 community settings with a variety of strategies 25 like proactive supervision models that emphasize the

1 importance of the relationship between line probation
2 staff and offenders as a change mechanism, and I 3 think that same strategy can be applied in 4 institutional settings as well. That requires 5 essentially a relationship to be developed between 6 staff and inmates in institutions. It is different 7 than the type of relationship that's typically power 8 and control oriented that you will see in many 9 institutions today. That's a redefinition of the 10 role of corrections officers that I'm talking about, 11 but I think it is consistent with what we're talking 12 about in the community corrections, so that's kind of 13 the second approach. But I think the staff-centered 14 response, in particular this notion that we change
15 staff culture, really is talking about how to change 16 the interaction between staff and inmates in 17 facilities.

18 The third approach, one that we probably 19 have the most empirical research on, are management-20 based strategies that talk about things the type of 21 people that are in this room today deal with every 22 day, what kind of things can the commissioners, the 23 wardens of the prisons do to reduce violence and 24 disorder. And we're starting to get data on that, I 25 wish we had even better empirical research, but we're

1 starting to get that right now and that research
2 suggests very specific things managers can do. One 3 of the most obvious is to reduce the scale of the 4 institutional system. People a lot smarter than me 5 have suggested this. "If you want to deal with the 6 drug problem in prison, one thing you can do is do is 7 stop putting drug users in prison," kind of basic.
8 And that's a quote from Jim Austin, I wish it was 9 mine, but it is his, and he thinks I'm wasting my 10 time on this evaluation research, why don't I focus 11 on essentially sentencing alternatives, put your 12 energies where we really need to. If you did that, 13 then you would be talking about drug users, the 14 mentally ill, and probably the biggest problem in 15 terms of the churning of offenders in and out of the 16 institutions and that's probation and parole 17 failures.

18 The reason I mention that scale as a 19 management strategy is that when you compare the 20 United States to other countries, particularly the 21 size of the staff and institutions, say, to England, 22 you can do very different things with restorative 23 justice and informal social controls when your 24 staff-to-inmate ratio is 10 to one. When it is a 25 hundred to one, it is a whole different ball game.

1 It is not surprising that we rely on the technology 2 of control, formal control mechanisms in 3 institutional settings with that type of strategy.
4 So this scale issue is one that I think can be 5 addressed, should be. If you say what kind of things 6 would really reduce violence and disorder in prison, 7 I think you would see that fairly quickly if you did 8 the kind of things that people have talked about in 9 the area of sentencing reform and also probation for 10 the violators. So obviously institutional and 11 community control are inexorably linked, I guess that 12 is the point I would make.

13 The other management strategies, the 14 important one to talk about in my last minute here, 15 are programs for offenders, rehabilitation programs 16 for offenders, and that kind of finishes with the 17 theme I would have in terms of looking at reducing 18 prison violence and disorder. I think we need an 19 open discussion of what we think the purpose of 20 prison is and I think we need to put the words 21 "offender change" back into the discussion.
22 Certainly we can talk about offender control and 23 certainly offender punishment, but we need to think 24 about offender change because you can do very 25 different things with offenders on a daily basis,

1 daily routines, if you believe in offender change,
2 and I think that's an alternative to gangs that you
3 talk about in both institutional and community 4 settings. Give them something different that will 5 make them have a different view of their lives and 6 their life course changes.

7 To finish with the comments that I read in 8 the community corrections literature, when do people 9 desist from crime. Basically if you read the 10 desistance literature you hear about four things.
11 One is jobs, so employment. We certainly can do 12 things in both institutional and community settings 13 that have an impact there.

14 The second is marriage in the desistance 15 process, and you might think, well, why would he 16 mention marriage. Well, a lot of things have to come 17 into place before somebody can start talking about 18 stable relationships and you are probably talking 19 about dealing with a myriad of individual and 20 community-level problems there.

21 And the third and fourth that are related 22 to in terms of the research on life course 23 criminology is military involvement and relocation.
24 Leave the military out for a moment here and focus on 25 the relocation and that's something to think about

1 because offenders are typically leaving some of the 2 worst communities in this country and they're 3 returning to those same communities. They're not 4 evenly distributed around the country. 600,000
5 offenders coming out of the prison systems last year, 6 the majority of them returned to five states. Within 7 those five states, they literally returned to a 8 handful of communities. And when you start thinking 9 about relocation as an aspect of it, you need to 10 think about how, if we cannot change the communities 11 in which offenders reside, we need to think about 12 this whole issue of when they're reentering that 13 community, how we can move them, perhaps, to 14 different locations. The research on that is mixed, 15 but that's certainly where we're headed at this 16 point. Thanks.

17 MR. MAYNARD: Dr. Byrne, down to the 18 last minute.

19 Mr. Alejandrez.

20 MR. ALEJANDREZ: Good morning. Buenos 21 dios.

22 I want to thank the commission for giving 23 me this opportunity to address you because, as I 24 wrote, this issue is very personal to me. It has 25 definitely affected my family and I feel for the

1 individuals that were in the last panel. I have seen 2 that scene over and over again throughout my life and 3 it really has destroyed my family. I come from a 4 large family of over 250 family members and in the 5 last, since 1975, my family has had so many 6 imprisoned that we're going on three generations of 7 incarceration in our family; grandfathers who did 8 time with their grandsons, so the prison system has 9 really affected a typical farm worker family that is 10 now spread out throughout the Department of 11 Corrections, not only in California, but throughout 12 this country.

13 So when we look at the issue of prisons and 14 gangs and the variety of reasons that individuals in 15 my family have been incarcerated -- at this time I 16 have about 20 members of my family in prison, the 17 highest has been 35 at one time -- and if you turn it 18 around, right now I have two in college and I have 19 possibly maybe three or four that are on their way to 20 getting a high school diploma if everything goes 21 well. So what he just said about in terms of the 22 communities that we come from and how we -- you take 23 who is in these prisons, who is -- you take in 24 New York City, most prisoners in New York City come 25 from a certain area and in California the majority of

1 the prisoners come from right here, Southern 2 California. I happen to live in Northern California
3 and we're pretty much catching up to Southern 4 California.

5 And so trying to deal with the madness,
6 what we call the madness, it is what Barrios Unidos
7 is about, Barrios Unidos, United Neighborhoods, 8 trying to look at the violence in our communities.
9 We started in 1977 trying to approach it and here we 10 are in 2006 and still the gang problem is totally out 11 of control and we have not found any major solutions.

12 We had found some things by forming 13 organizations, community-based organizations that can 14 deal with these problems. We understand that the 15 gangs exist, we don't deny that they exist, we must 16 not deny it, we must face it, but it is also a hard 17 situation to deal with. A couple weeks ago there was 18 a murder in my area and I went to the funeral. And I 19 knew that there was going to be retaliation that 20 night so I went out to the local downtown and I was 21 standing on the street corner, just being there. A 22 lot of people know me in the community and they pass 23 me by. And I turned around and I looked and I said, 24 "How many 56-year-old men are out here?" We have 25 abandoned our children. We have abandoned our

1 children. And I looked around and I said, "There's 2 no" -- you know, I couldn't even find a 40-year-old 3 to stand with me on the corner. So as communities we 4 have become afraid of our children and so we let the 5 state take care of them, we turn them over to the 6 state, and when they get to the state, we have lost
7 generations. For my family, we lost generations. So 8 when I say it is personal for me, I'm trying to 9 capture my relatives. And I call all the folks that 10 I have been working with in institutions for the last 11 15 years are my relatives, these are brothers and 12 sisters that are incarcerated. And when we're afraid 13 to walk by our relatives, to go hug our relatives, I 14 don't know. When we are going into the institutions, 15 the first thing they call, they say, "Her comes the 16 hug-a-thug day." "Here comes the do-gooders." Well, 17 you know, if I'm a do-gooder, I'm a do-gooder, but 18 those are human beings, they're locked up. For 19 whatever reason, they're locked up.

20 And I don't have much amount of time, but I
21 was able to generate some letters from individuals 22 that I worked with, individuals that I have seen 23 change their lives around completely, and I am 24 blessed, I am blessed to be part of that, to see that 25 men, and I'm going to talk specifically men because

1 that's the group that I work with, men of all races
2 have changed when we go into these institutions.

3 To talk about gangs and why people join 4 gangs, and Willie, Willie says, "When I first went to 5 Pelican Bay, you are so fascinated by, oh, here is 6 all these guys you've always heard about, all these 7 guys running everything, just fascinating." All you 8 hear is the way they talk, Aztec language, all this 9 knowledge, philosophy from reading all this stuff.
10 "I want to be like that, I want to be smart and 11 educated like he sounds." Well, unfortunately, some 12 of the individuals that get grabbed by that don't 13 make it outside or some of them realize that's not 14 really what they were looking for in the first place, 15 you know.

16 So when we talk about alternatives and we 17 talk about what it is we're going to do to bring our 18 relatives back home, what we found in working in 19 several institutions in California is the culture of 20 spiritual transformation. What I mean by that is if 21 I know where I come from, who I am, who Nane is, Nane 22 will not return to prison, Nane will try to take 23 himself, transform himself to be a better human 24 being; that I as a man have a responsibility back in 25 my community, but also in that community I ask that

1 community for forgiveness and I ask the community to 2 take me back and to allow me to be a productive
3 citizen in that community. But this all starts 4 within the institutions.

5 We knew from the get-go in 1977 that if we 6 were not in these institutions, we would not have 7 peace out in the streets. Peace can come from within 8 these institutions. There are so many, so many peace 9 warriors inside these institutions that we have never 10 reached out to to help us to deal with the gang 11 problem, to deal with those individuals that are 12 going in and out.

13 And lastly I just want to say that my work
14 in the institutions has brought me great satisfaction
15 because I have seen the change in these human beings
16 and for the prisoners that I work with who help
17 organize the Cinco de Mayo, Juneteenth and Native 18 American Pow Wow and all the cultural ceremonies that 19 go on inside these institutions. I speak for them
20 because on Friday I was with them and I said that I
21 would be here and I would try to speak the truth. I 22 would speak the truth to the best I can because 23 they're coming back to their communities. We want 24 them to be better fathers, better brothers.

25 And I brought also some photographs that I

1 would like to later on leave with the commission
2 where you see black men, brown men holding hands,
3 dancing, you know. When you bring a culture and a 4 spirit and the drum, when you bring that drum into 5 that prison and you start, we all relate to that.
6 And brothers start coming; black brothers start 7 coming, white brothers start coming, and all form a 8 circle and we lead and we dance. Nobody ever thought 9 we could do that. We have been doing that for 15 10 years now. And I think that we can change things, we 11 must change the restorative justice, we must change 12 the way we look at our relatives. And thank you very 13 much.

14 MR. MAYNARD: Mr. Delgado.

15 MR. DELGADO: Yes. Good morning and 16 thank you to the commission on allowing me to speak 17 to you today.

18 The gang issue is a very serious one that 19 not only affects our communities, but our prison 20 communities as well. And I think oftentimes the 21 reason I use "prison communities" is because they are 22 in themselves their own little cities and 23 neighborhoods within those fences.

24 Today's gangs are growing stronger as their 25 membership increases and through alliances they are

1 strengthened also. Gangs today, in my opinion, have 2 basically replaced the Mafia of yesteryear, that old
3 Mafia that we had seen before with the Costa Nostra 4 and the alliances and basically working together at 5 times in order to accomplish things even though they 6 may have actual differences within their particular 7 groups and we see that. However, the problem is that 8 we as a society, in my opinion, haven't recognized 9 that shift, the change in the attitude, and we tend 10 to look at gangs as neighborhood groups and we tend 11 to look at gang activity as something that is 12 juvenile.

13 The challenges we face today are extremely 14 complex. For example, popular culture through music, 15 television and video games often glamorizes gang
16 membership and gang activity. The media, you know, 17 is continually reporting the gang activity that is 18 plaguing our communities and as a result, the benefit 19 to the gang is that they get the notoriety that 20 they're looking for. A common example that you could 21 see today, probably one of the most publicized gangs 22 there is would be the MS 13. However, probably one 23 of the biggest problems that we see today is, that we 24 face, is the general view that gangs are youth-25 oriented and that we don't look beyond the fact that

1 adults do participate within gangs and that they do 2 continue and it becomes generational in a matter of 3 speaking.

4 Gangs inside prisons, as well as outside
5 prisons, also tend to take the form of a criminal 6 enterprise that focuses on business growth and 7 operations. This has been seen, for example, in the 8 Black Gangster Disciples, the Growth & Development.
9 And you look at a lot of different gangs that have 10 been established in 20, 30, 40 years, you start to 11 see a shift in actually creating political action 12 committees and things of that nature.

13 In Ohio, our approach was basically 14 reactive in the past and what we chose to do is we 15 chose to look at creating more of a proactive type of 16 approach to two main issues; one being the 17 investigative enforcement side and then on the other 18 side, the inmate programming component to be able to 19 deal with the problems that we face. Now, Ohio is a 20 large correctional agency with approximately 45,000 21 inmates, 32 correctional facilities, and our 22 department also is responsible for parole supervision 23 which has probably 35,000 offenders on parole. And 24 in the past, as I said, they're basically reactive.
25 We approach the things reactively. We profile, we

1 conduct an investigation, things that are at the 2 local level, and through our new proactive approaches 3 we decide to basically refine some of the elements of 4 our STG program. These added goals are defined as 5 reducing the flow of drugs in the correctional 6 facilities, because it is our belief that the gang 7 activity is responsible for the drugs coming into the 8 prison as a part of gangs controlling the prison
9 economy. And, you know, people tend to argue saying 10 well, it is not all gangs that are actually bringing 11 those drugs into our facilities. However, if you 12 look at the amount of people that it takes to 13 actually accomplish that, whether they actually have 14 a gang name or colors or not is really kind of 15 irrelevant when you look at the problems themselves.

16 Two. Offer programming and assistance to 17 offenders with affiliation issues. One of the things 18 that we want to make sure that we're looking at is 19 that we're not just leaving out those people that do 20 have affiliation issues and to just solely 21 concentrate on those inmates that have come out and 22 self-admitted that I'm a member of a particular 23 group. And as a result, we want to create better, 24 safer prisons and also that relates back out to the 25 community.

1 Briefly speaking, on the refined
2 investigations, when we did our research and we 3 looked at an investigator process we realized that 4 one of the elements that we were missing was the 5 parolee on community piece. One of the panel people 6 said earlier, people are often afraid to speak, 7 they're often afraid to say anything, especially when 8 they're incarcerated. If you've got drugs coming 9 into your prison, you've got different types of 10 activity coming in there, you tend to run into 11 problems with people saying anything. We found it 12 was easier to actually approach it from the outside, 13 work the investigation from the outside in, to be 14 able to gather the information and then also identify 15 the players on the street that are involved in the 16 drug trafficking that's going on inside. Our unit, 17 which we call the enforcement unit, has been 18 established for approximately three years now and has 19 been extremely successful.

20 On the programming side, we want to provide 21 education showing the negative effects of gang 22 memberships, strengthening family bounds, and provide 23 continuing support through incarceration into the 24 community. That's one of the components that through 25 our research we found that we couldn't find.

1 Those people that -- we want to make sure
2 that this is a voluntary program so that we're not 3 taking the reactive approach and just forcing the 4 program on them to do their time in segregation. We 5 want to be able to focus on programming such as 6 cultural diversity, anger management, how it relates 7 to hate, life choices, and also some limited drug and 8 alcohol education, not just as a user, but also from 9 a seller perspective, and also some include some 10 other vocational skills.

11 Our program which we call COPE, which 12 stands for Creating Opportunities for Positive 13 Endeavors, is basically currently developed as far as 14 the prison side of it. We're still working on 15 community piece.

16 When we started this process of creating 17 the COPE program we realized that it was necessary 18 that we include many community partners and also look 19 at other state agencies. We worked with the Ohio 20 Department of Youth Services which controls the 21 juvenile facilities within the state to work on the 22 process with us, we have a seamless program that runs 23 between youth and adult facilities, and also the 24 Adult Parole Authority in conjunction with the Ohio 25 Attorney General's office. We are currently looking

1 at different vendors to be able to, and community
2 groups to be able to provide some of the services not 3 just on the community piece, but to also bring the 4 community into our facilities and to help with 5 strengthening family ties through our visiting 6 component to be able to reintegrate the offender back 7 into the family.

8 In closing, we feel that we put together a 9 comprehensive program to combat gangs on many levels.
10 Of course, it is going to be a difficult task. And 11 as our enforcement unit project has proved to be 12 successful, we hope that our gang program is also, 13 the COPE program is also going to be beneficial.
14 Thank you.

15 MR. MAYNARD: Thank you. And I want to 16 thank each of you for your testimony and we will 17 certainly have three different perspectives on the 18 gang problem.

19 And I have, just to start the questioning, 20 a question that was alluded to earlier about gangs 21 being, gangs in prison being related to the intensity
22 of the gangs in the community. And do you think it 23 is possible that in an area where gangs are dominant 24 in the community, you have gangs in the prisons, to 25 reduce the impact of those gangs in the prison, each

1 one of you, if you don't mind?

2 Dr. Byrne.

3 DR. BYRNE: You say programs to reduce 4 the impact of gangs?

5 MR. MAYNARD: Yes. Can you reduce the 6 impact of the gangs in the prisons if they're in a 7 community where or in a state where gangs are 8 predominant.

9 DR. BYRNE: I mean, that's obviously 10 going to be the $64,000 question.

11 I think you need to look at some of the 12 gang intervention programs that everybody is talking 13 about at the community level. The most obvious one 14 is Operation Ceasefire. A criminologist by the name 15 of James Q. Wilson calls it the most significant 16 intervention program developed in the last hundred 17 years. Others have taken a more pessimistic view of 18 what it is about, but it is interesting to think 19 about in terms of what this panel is doing because 20 essentially what Operation Ceasefire is, is the 21 carrot and stick program. The carrot is to offer 22 incentives to gang members and gang leaders not to be 23 involved in violence in those areas. The incentives 24 include taking the marks off, the gang affiliation 25 marks, access to programs that they wouldn't have

1 access to, job, employment, things like that. The 2 disincentives, or the stick part of it in terms of 3 carrot and stick, is to utilize zero tolerance, 4 policing strategies in those areas which will disrupt
5 the various types of criminal enterprises those gangs 6 might be involved in. So essentially what you are 7 saying, I think I heard at the beginning, is you are 8 saying to the gangs as long as the stuff doesn't get 9 bad in terms of serious violence, particularly 10 homicides in areas, we will let you do the little 11 stuff, and it is essentially an exchange relationship 12 between gang leaders and community leaders in those 13 areas.

14 If you take that same approach and apply it 15 to prisons, you have essentially handed over some of 16 the control of the prisons to the dominant gangs, 17 right? If you say, "Look," you go to a leader of a 18 gang and say, "We're having problems here, Jim, and 19 we don't want these problems and if they keep 20 happening you probably know we're going to come down 21 here very hard and that might affect things that you 22 do." It could be something -- so that, to me that 23 might not translate. I get nervous with Operation 24 Ceasefire strategies, with carrot and sticks, not 25 because I don't like this combination of carrot and

1 sticks, as much as typically what I find is we leave 2 out the carrots and we haven't figured out what 3 people really get in terms of their involvement in 4 gangs, that's my original comment. We don't 5 underestimate the importance of gang affiliations to 6 these individuals and I think I answered some of that 7 here.

8 MR. MAYNARD: Mr. Alejandrez.

9 MR. ALEJANDREZ: I think that you can 10 have an impact but it is something that has to be 11 unrooted because it has been in there for many years.
12 When you have generations of involvement, you see the 13 same thing over and over again, so why change if you 14 don't have nothing happening in the community.

15 I was at the Hollenbeck area yesterday and 16 Father Greg Boyle is running a great program, all 17 kinds of young people involved in it, but that's one 18 organization in the sea of thousands that are needed.
19 You know, I think that if we can provide jobs, we can 20 provide those programs within the prisons that people 21 have talked about and direct it to the community, I 22 think that we could start to make a dent on it.

23 Also I just want to mention to you, I have 24 been involved in several national peace summits 25 throughout the country and we brought some of the

1 biggest gangs in the country together to talk about 2 peace and economic justice and we asked this 3 government for support, we asked President Clinton at 4 that time, we have asked other governments, to help 5 us to bring economic justice to these communities.
6 And the good example is the Bloods and Crips peace 7 treaty that happened. That was a historic thing that 8 this country I think failed to take advantage of and 9 to look at and how they could support such a 10 movement. I held that to the accord of any peace 11 treaty throughout the world because if you look at 12 the individuals that have died in wars and 13 individuals that died in the war between Bloods and 14 Crips and for them to come up with a treaty to 15 ceasefire and look at economic justice, we do this in 16 every country where we take the courts to every 17 country, we provide them economic sustainability, but 18 yet here in L.A. where we could have, we had an 19 opportunity to create a positive impact on gangs 20 throughout this country, so now we find ourselves on 21 the other side, looking from the East Coast this way, 22 they came this way.

23 And, again, I think just in terms of how 24 the media plays out on this gang thing, one is MS, 25 you know. There's gangs that have been involved and

1 bigger than MS for a long time, yet I think that the 2 media itself is making a great recruitment for MS 3 members, so we have to be aware how the media is 4 playing and how our communities have been betrayed.

5 MR. DELGADO: I think that the relationship 6 between the prison and the community as far as the 7 gang relationship stems from a couple different 8 issues. I think that the family dynamic has broke 9 down within the actual inmate's family, organic 10 members family, I'm not talking about the gang 11 family. It gets confusing at times. And I think one 12 of the components that we were looking at is actually 13 the family strengthening component to the COPE
14 program where we actually through supervised 15 visitation actually tried to reintegrate the family 16 back into the inmate's life to provide the support.
17 And then also in the community piece, one of the 18 things that we're looking at is being able to offer 19 assistance through independent housing which 20 currently exists within the department to be able to 21 basically relocate them to a non-gang area because 22 part of the recidivism that happens with the gang 23 activity tends to go back to -- I mean, you have a 24 guy that goes into a prison who is a gang member on 25 the street, he may have done nothing while he was

1 incarcerated, and then upon release he is going back 2 to the same gang neighborhood and he has got the peer 3 pressures in participating. And it doesn't start off 4 let's go out and do this or that that may be a 5 criminal act, it goes to hanging out with his 6 friends. And really the entire culture -- I remember
7 years ago when I started off as a corrections officer 8 and I used to bring guys in that were new loads that 9 were coming into the prison and there were guys that 10 this was the first they were in prison and as we 11 walked up from Point A, B, C as you are going through 12 the process, guys knew half the population. I mean, 13 it is just the culture that's ingrained. So one of 14 the things that we really tried to focus on in 15 developing the program was actually to get into the 16 cognitive behavioral therapy of actually trying to 17 change values and change how they process and look at 18 other people and to break down some of those barriers 19 that have been established for years and, you know, 20 generations in some cases. So I think that it is 21 important that you look at both together when you are 22 looking at prisons and community because if you are 23 only working on one side of the issue, you are not 24 going to be able to accomplish it from a holistic 25 approach.

1 MR. MAYNARD: Thank you.

2 MS. ROBINSON: Professor Byrne, I was 3 pleased to hear you raise the idea of restorative 4 justice programs because we have certainly seen their 5 success and seen the research that has shown their 6 success in settings outside of prison. Do you have 7 examples where there have been models tried in prison 8 settings?

9 DR. BYRNE: Yes. The current example
10 is the research in the British prison system right 11 now and the results of that evaluation of his model, 12 which is what I just very briefly described in my 13 statement, I will describe it to you in a little more 14 detail, an inmate-focused restorative justice model, 15 that research hopefully will be available fairly 16 soon, but right now this is the problem you have in 17 our field where there's really just a need for a 18 whole evidence-based practice approach. We typically 19 don't do Level 3 or above evaluations, we don't do 20 experiments or quasi-experiments in institutional 21 settings, so what you are left with is a lot of 22 observational research, a lot of what is considered 23 fairly low-level, non-experimental research. So even 24 if you have a good program and there is a nice 25 description of it, we don't know if that program

1 really has the effect people are saying it does and 2 that's typical in our field and that's why the push 3 in community corrections right now is towards 4 evidence-based practice. People will say the words 5 "evidence-based practice," by the way, but they don't 6 have any evidence, they just say it. It is kind of 7 nice to say, based on evidence. They're making it
8 up, there's not a body of research, and I'm doing a 9 systematic review right now on the prison-based 10 literature.

11 We have some pretty good research I think 12 on management strategies, crowd reduction strategies, 13 essentially situational prison control strategies
14 that relate to movement of offenders from one place
15 to the other. We don't have good evaluation research 16 yet on either the staff strategies that we're 17 evaluating for NIC or the inmate-focused approaches, 18 but I think those are the promising strategies and we 19 have literature from the community, so that's kind of 20 where people are going right now. I think the real 21 key is to open up the doors of the prisons and the 22 transparency part of it is related to performance
23 measures, but it is also letting evaluators in, and I 24 think we are right now in the prisons where we were, 25 community corrections, about 20 years ago. The only

1 people they let in were the people that were going to 2 do positive, non-critical evaluations because they 3 were afraid of what they heard and there's a lot of 4 reasons they should. Think about your job as a 5 corrections commissioner. Three and a half, four 6 years if you are lucky. It is not tenure like me, 7 I'm 22 years at one university. They don't have 8 that. So they fear me when I come in because I might 9 produce a negative evaluation and what's the typical 10 thing you do when you are faced with a crisis, 11 somebody dies? Obviously that's a crisis situation.
12 Or a negative evaluation saying the place is poorly 13 managed. You replace a manager, right? So that's 14 the danger, of course, of the evidence-based 15 approach, but I think we're heading in that direction 16 slowly and I think that's kind of -- if I could 17 suggest to the commission a recommendation, that 18 would be the one certainly that you should consider.

19 MS. ROBINSON: Actually that's a very 20 good suggestion and we are very interested in 21 evidence-based approaches for programs and are very 22 keenly aware of the levels of that. In the 23 restorative justice area outside prison, the program
24 evaluations that are available are randomized, 25 controlled trials so they are Level 5, the highest.

1 DR. BYRNE: That's what you need.

2 MS. ROBINSON: Exactly. Thank you.

3 MR. MAYNARD: Any other questions from 4 the commissioners?

5 MR. KRONE: It seems that you have 6 academic background, street level background looking 7 into these problems, you are trying to change a 8 system. You have to work with political entities I 9 would think, problem prison entities. How much 10 resistance are you getting from them to implement the 11 change or at least accept the information that you 12 have acquired and learned and how can we overcome 13 some of those obstacles if they are receptive to 14 those suggestions?

15 DR. BYRNE: That's an excellent
16 question. I think a lot of what NIC is trying to do 17 right now on a very small scale in terms of changing 18 staff and management culture is about resistance to 19 change. Everybody says it all comes down to culture.
20 They said it 30 years ago about policing and we did 21 our whole watershed change in terms of now we talk 22 about community-oriented policing and now we use the 23 term generally "culture." We're really talking about 24 resistance to change in organizations and how we get 25 people to start thinking differently about it. Part

1 of it is the transparency. I think the Prison Rape
2 Elimination Act, opening the doors to institutions, 3 having to provide information, opening the discussion 4 on how extensive the violence and disorder problem is 5 in prison, that helps, that's the -- I think 6 information is empowering. It is not only 7 information, but certainly that's one aspect of it.
8 But, you know, it is not easy and I think just 9 developing initiatives that focus specifically on why 10 people think the way they do about offenders helps.

11 You are all excellent active listeners up 12 here, I'm looking at you, for the most part you are 13 active listening. A lot of prisoners, when they walk 14 into a prison they're not facing a group of people 15 that are saying hey, let's figure out how to change
16 you, they're saying there goes Jimmy the sex 17 offender, the pedophile, the guy who murdered Joe, 18 the corrections workers, they can't stand those 19 people, and you have to put that on the table in 20 terms of talking about how you are going to change an 21 institution. There is a lot of resistance in part 22 because of attitudes about certain offenders groups 23 so if we can't change it in the general society, how 24 do we expect to change it within line staff and 25 midlevel management in corrections facilities. So

1 part of it is getting the information out there about 2 who the offender is and what's really involved, who 3 is in prison, who should be there, who shouldn't be 4 there, so that would be my response about how you
5 break down the resistance to change, and part of it 6 is just putting it on the table where people are 7 actually talking about their own attitudes about 8 offender groups, that helps. I don't know if that 9 answers it.

10 MR. ALEJANDREZ: Some part of that 11 resistance, and there is resistance, part of the 12 resistance is that fear of change, that fear of maybe 13 something is wrong. And what we noticed, it takes us 14 a long time to move into a facility where we meet the 15 warden, we meet the assistant warden down the line, 16 and so it takes up quite a bit of time to develop 17 that trust, but our relatives trust us already, 18 relatives in there, and so if we can develop that 19 trust. And what I see also in the resistance is that 20 a lot of people are saying you are helping all these 21 gang members, you are giving them credibility, and I 22 always kind of -- it puzzles me in California in 23 terms of how we say credibility of gang members when, 24 you know, the State of California gave them that 25 credibility a long time ago when they built Pelican

1 Bay Prison specifically to deal with gang membership.
2 So you look at the millions of dollars that are spent 3 yearly on the institution specifically to deal with 4 gang membership. So we have to look at that and say 5 is that really where we want our resources to go, so 6 we have to look -- and the resistance to change. We 7 have to have the laws come in there to change some of 8 that resistance.

9 I'm hopeful that at some point we would 10 definitely be looking at restorative justice. We 11 have gone into the juvenile justice facilities and 12 looking at that in terms of the county where I'm 13 from, Santa Cruz County, through the Annie Casey 14 Foundation looking at restorative justice and other 15 community organizations, but there's always 16 resistance with these institutions.

17 MR. GREEN: Just a followup on the 18 resistance issue.

19 Dr. Byrne, you said that the acceptance of 20 evidence-based research is showing some progress, it 21 is growing slowly. What has caused that to be more 22 acceptable to prisons, to allow persons like yourself 23 to come in and to get data and to develop programs or 24 positions?

25 DR. BYRNE: Typically they will be --

1 what I found in community corrections is that nobody 2 wants to be the last one on the bus but typically,
3 particularly, for example, a lot of the reentry 4 initiatives that happened over the last several 5 years, you were tied into an evaluation component and 6 I think initiatives that are developed and built in 7 in external, objective evaluation are a key. There's 8 a lot of resistance even within organizations that 9 provide the money now of doing that and that's what 10 you need. You don't need -- and I like doing it.
11 Jim Burn, who is a newspaper reporter, wrote a nice 12 profile on such and such a program. I did that on 13 reentry programs and they're out there on the web, 14 you can read them. I like doing that work. But to 15 do the objective, external evaluations is more 16 difficult, it hurts your relationship with those 17 people, right? If you are my friend and I write a 18 negative evaluation, you think you are my friend and 19 Byrne burns me, it is a problem with having a name 20 like Byrne as an evaluator, obviously you might not 21 want to let me in again, and that's one of the issues
22 that you have to put on the table with this. But I 23 think the way you do it is you tie initiatives and 24 incentive money to programs to try new programs with 25 an external evaluation component. You can't do it

1 internal, you can't let the people running the 2 programs do the evaluation, and we have that in the 3 rehabilitation literature right now. It is a
4 question of whether some of the programs really show 5 the effects they're supposed to show because the 6 people who ran the programs are the people who 7 evaluated them and we know what the problem will be 8 there, so that's an excellent question. I mean, I 9 think you do it by tying the initiatives, new money 10 initiatives in particular. There's going to be 11 support for new model program development with 12 external evaluation and funding.

13 MR. RYAN: I tend every now and then to 14 have a whole naive side to myself that I worry about, 15 but we can't necessarily fix the community that the 16 people came from. They came from the community and 17 we have this whole society out here that says be 18 tough on crime so give them time, 10, 20, life, all 19 of those types of things, and put them in prison, and 20 we don't necessarily have a good connection, although 21 we probably should have, to the community on the 22 outside. So I ran a jail and I get people for 23 23 days is my average. I'm not sure what prisons are 24 but let's give them a couple of years that they have 25 people in there.

1 What do you want us to do between the time
2 they walk in and the time they walk out to change
3 what is perceived as a gang culture that is there, 4 and why as a culture or a prison culture or 5 administrators do we tolerate gangs being allowed in 6 our jails and prisons. Why can't we sit down when 7 individuals walk in and say, and this is my naive
8 side now, why can't we sit down and say that activity 9 is not tolerated in this facility, this prison, this 10 process that you are in; stop it, don't have your 11 flag hanging out of your pants, don't have all of 12 those types of things, we will not tolerate that and, 13 in fact, if you proliferate in some fashion some sort 14 of gang activity you will end up in the special dorm 15 down south and you will stay there for your entire 16 period of time because we do not tolerate that 17 behavior here. We can't fix the before and sometimes 18 we can't fix the after, but we do have some control 19 in between the walls. What should we be doing to 20 make it safe, secure if gangs are considered bad, 21 which it sounds like they're bad, what do we need to 22 do to fix it?

23 DR. BYRNE: Well, I don't think more
24 control and segregation and those type of stick 25 approach strategies work real well and they just put

1 an incredible strain on resources of institutions 2 because it is harder to manage offenders like that,
3 but the short answer to what you said is to do what 4 you and I are doing now, we're looking at each other 5 one-on-one, and I think relationships that are 6 developed within institutions are probably the best 7 way of reducing the power of gangs in the sense that 8 you develop a relationship with a staff worker or a 9 counselor or whatever that essentially provides an 10 alternative to that person to what he gets which is 11 positive within the gang which is support, identity.
12 So the first thing you ask what you would do. I 13 guess it is this, it is that interaction, trying to 14 make a connection to somebody, and I don't think we 15 do that just by reading me the rules and telling me 16 where I might go if I do something, that's probably 17 not going to do it. What would make more sense, I 18 think, is to improve informal social control 19 mechanisms and think about how you might do that, 20 that's where restorative justice models come in, and 21 that's certainly where culture change models come in 22 because you are talking about changing the staff's 23 approach to offenders as opposed to one where I'm 24 simply telling you what to do and another where I'm 25 essentially using motivational interviewing

1 techniques and a variety of other strategies to get 2 you to think about what you heard today which is 3 transformation; that you can do something with your 4 life differently. How do you do it in 22 days I'm 5 not sure, but I think the starting point would be 6 this as opposed to trying to read you a statement 7 this is what will happen with this commission, it is 8 not. It is this. I think that's not the right
9 approach.

10 MR. RYAN: Nane, what do we need to do?

11 MR. ALEJANDREZ: In 22 days it is hard
12 but, you know, but I believe in miracles.

13 MR. RYAN: We have faith, we can do 14 that.

15 MR. ALEJANDREZ: One is what I
16 mentioned earlier. If you don't -- if little Joe 17 doesn't do what he is supposed to do in this 18 institution, we're going we send you up to -- I call 19 it send it up state because they usually wind up in 20 Pelican Bay, you know. We have seen what happens in 21 Pelican Bay, we see how people are running the show 22 from Pelican Bay. No matter how secure you make it, 23 it is going to operate.

24 Let me take what just recently happened in 25 L.A. County, the last uprising that happened there.

1 They had a program there called AmeriCan run by some 2 brothers on the street and stuff, and all those 3 individuals that were there, it was mixed, 4 multicultural, all those individuals that were in 5 that AmeriCan program did not participate in the 6 riots. Now, to my knowledge, that program is not 7 there anymore. So sometimes we have effective 8 programs. Take Tracy Prison. Tracy Prison had 9 tremendous vocational programs that allowed the 10 lifers there to manage the gang situations, to bring 11 the youngsters into the vocational and guide them and 12 instead of being out in the yards, let's go to 13 vocational, let's go to this, get involved in this, 14 preparing them to leave the institution. I mean,
15 that's working within, that's what I was saying 16 earlier about utilizing the resources that we have in 17 there. Those programs are all closed now and that 18 side of the prison is like a ghost town. So I think 19 that we have eliminated some of the programs that 20 have worked. The word "Rehabilitation" is back now 21 in the corrections system, we'll see what that means.
22 One of the reasons that I really wanted to be here is 23 because I really would like to push that we look at 24 restorative justice, we look at rehabilitation and 25 what rehabilitation really means.

1 And on a personal, you know, all those 2 relatives of mine, somebody has to deal with their 3 children that are left behind. How many of you
4 commissioners have relatives in prison? I'm pretty 5 sure you'd probably have a whole different take if 6 you had to go stand up like the lady said when she 7 was standing outside that prison yard waiting to see 8 her husband and seeing that.

9 You know, when I see elders, the way
10 they're treated in the visiting room in Pelican Bay 11 Prison and make them walk like a duck sideways and 12 their elders holding their pants up, it is the most 13 humiliating thing that I have ever seen. We got to 14 change that system. When individuals are treated 15 with human dignity, they themselves start to change.
16 The reason there is rioting, we have not -- we have 17 not done that in these institutions and I think 18 everybody knows it. We just go around in circles.

19 MR. RYAN: Thank you, Nane.

20 Mr. Delgado.

21 MR. DELGADO: When we talk about kind
22 of the lock-them-up-in-segregation-throw-away-
23 the-key-type mentalities, I think the important thing 24 in that respect is that is reactive. That's actually 25 pretty common throughout the country through the 1 research that we have done and that's basically how 2 correctional systems manage their inmates. Now do 3 those systems have programming during the 4 incarceration and segregation for their gang members, 5 yes. And a lot of it is good programming. It

6 focuses on the issues of looking at different 7 diversity issues, it focuses on rage, it focuses on 8 hate and things like that. However, when you present 9 that in that type of environment, you know, really is 10 the end result, is the end result, are you getting 11 that end result because of the programming or are you 12 getting that end result because you have locked them
13 up for 10 years, and I think that that's the thing 14 you look at. Through our research we've looked at 15 some of the prison systems where they will, a guy 16 will end up in segregation for a number of years, be 17 offered the program, and then say we've got a hundred 18 percent success rate. Is it because of your program 19 or because you locked him up for 10, 14 years before 20 you even allowed him to go through the program to be 21 able to get out of segregation? That's a completely 22 reactive approach. To really change things you need 23 to get to them before they do something that is 24 detrimental to themselves and you really need to take 25 the proactive approach which starts with when they

1 come in through reception identifying if they are a 2 gang member.

3 One of the things that we do, and our 4 average stay in Ohio is 2.7 years, and for inmates in 5 general, the one thing that we do at our reception
6 center is inmates that -- we have a team of people 7 that are trained to look for signs, for 8 identification, and they sit down and talk to the STG 9 person at that institution and they tell them what 10 the rules are and they tell them what won't be 11 tolerated and then we deal with it from there.
12 That mainly in the past, that was for the process of 13 being able to track and monitor. What we're moving 14 into is identification for the purpose of programming 15 needs through reentry, identifying the needs that 16 they have and then being able to address it in that 17 short timeframe.

18 You know, 2.7 years may seem like a long 19 time, and I'm sure that it is for the guys that are 20 locked up, but when you talk about 15, 20, 30 years
21 of ingrained behavior and thought process, that 2.7
22 years is a fairly short period of time.

23 And one of the things that we wanted to 24 address within our program was not just -- one of the 25 things you run into when you look at correctional

1 programming is that, okay, here you go through this 2 program, and at the end of however long time period
3 it is, here is your certificate. And, of course, 4 that certificate is as good as whatever the parole 5 board wants to make of it and that goes into their 6 file folder and then they present that to the parole 7 board when they come up. But the problem with that 8 is that there's very little aftercare, very little 9 followup, and being able to help them manage that 10 change. You know, the fact is they're going to have 11 to make that decision if they want to do the right 12 thing or not, but what the system should be doing is 13 be able to foster it and allow that change to occur
14 and then to be able to support those positive 15 decisions and that's the reason why we want to take 16 the approach from not only having the six-month 17 program end with three-month step-down and then 18 continuing type of aftercare, kind of like what is 19 seen with the models of drug and alcohol counseling, 20 to be able to go to those meetings, kind of have your 21 A.A.-type meeting where you are going to something on 22 a regular basis, you are seeing your counselor, and 23 then you are working through and even upon release 24 you've also got community support there as well.

25 I think that that is -- you know, the

1 downside is it is so easy to lock them up but the 2 resources that you expend as far as keeping them in a 3 segregated environment, not just with the actual cost 4 of building the facilities, staffing those 5 facilities, but, you know, on the other side you are 6 actually giving them something to put on their gang
7 resume. What brings more to the table, for example, 8 for an inmate that is a gang member in California if 9 they can say they have been to Pelican Bay and they 10 have been around all these different people? I mean, 11 if they're not wanting to change their mind set,
12 that's the core. You've got to change their mind
13 set. Locking them up does nothing unless you do 14 something that's proactive, you now make that 15 positive change.

16 MR. BRIGHT: Could I just be sure I
17 understand this. When the person comes into a 18 facility in Ohio, you say people are trained, even if 19 they don't say, they identify them as a gang member?

20 MR. DELGADO: Correct.

21 MR. BRIGHT: What happens then? What 22 is the person told at that point about gang 23 affiliation, what they can do and then where are they 24 housed and all that?

25 MR. DELGADO: You are talking about the

1 tracking processes?

2 MR. BRIGHT: Yes. What do you tell the 3 person, you can't anymore? What Mr. Ryan said here, 4 you can't wear any insignia, blah, blah, blah, or 5 what do you do?

6 MR. DELGADO: Well, basically when they 7 come in -- and the easiest form of identification is 8 usually their tattoos and also through self-9 admission, you know -- they're asked the question are 10 you a gang member, have you been part of any type of 11 organization, and we kind of break it down from 12 there.

13 On the profiling portion of that, what ends
14 up happening is that they get profiled as being a 15 member of a security threat group or an unauthorized 16 group, and what we do from that standpoint is that we 17 check up on them, and by policy we have to check up 18 on them at least every two years and that may include 19 shaking their property down, making sure that they're 20 not possessing gang-related materials, and that would 21 also include within that two-year review talking to 22 the security threat group investigator at that 23 facility just to interview them to find out what's 24 going on, allow them to look back through their 25 record, try to look at what their behavior has been,

1 and then just to see what's going on with them so we 2 can make sure at what level. We utilize a
3 participation-based system as far as STG
4 identification. Some systems use a validation
5 system. California, my understanding, uses 6 validation where they have to acquire a certain 7 amount of points to even be validated. Anybody that 8 exhibits any type of behavior, participating in an 9 unauthorized group through whatever means, mainly 10 through self-admission, we profile them and we track 11 them. And this is to kind of give them the, you 12 know, the belief that we're continually watching them 13 and to help them kind of correct their behavior.

14 MR. KRONE: Excuse me. You are 15 familiar with the term "blood in, blood out"?

16 MR. DELGADO: Yes.

17 MR. KRONE: If you would, explain that 18 to the group panel what that means and then explain 19 to me how, if those gang members want to get out, 20 take advantage of the programs you are offering, how 21 do you protect them then from the rest of the 22 inmates?

23 MR. DELGADO: The term "blood in, blood 24 out" generally means that you shed somebody's blood 25 to get into the gang and they shed your blood to get

1 out of the gang, so basically you are kind of in for 2 life-type mentality. We looked at that issue when we 3 were developing our program because we wanted to make 4 sure. And one of the reasons that we were also 5 looking at other inmates that have affiliation-type 6 issues, those people that when they commit those 7 crimes, they are doing it with others, they tend to 8 be followers. We want to be able to hit them too 9 because later on down the road they could also be a 10 more full-fledged gang member.

11 But we wanted to take some of the emphasis 12 off it being called a gang program and for particular 13 reason. Because if Inmate Smith is going through 14 this program and it is the gang program, well, then, 15 the entire population is a gang member. And then,
16 also, they also get the outside pressures from inside 17 the facility for even taking the program.

18 You know, one of the things that we wanted 19 to kind of safeguard against is, one, having 20 disruption within the program which is why we screen, 21 which we will be screening the inmates that go 22 through there, but we wanted to at least during the 23 initial six months, that step-down phase that I
24 talked about, was actually to be able to reintegrate 25 them somewhat into population on a full-time basis.

1 Within the early stages they're not necessarily,
2 they're not segregated, they just have different 3 recreation time and things like that to kind of allow 4 them to clear their heads, see where they're at,
5 they're not dealing with the outside pressures.
6 They're not locked in their cells or anything, 7 they're within the housing unit, they're going out,
8 they are going to recreation, going to commissary, 9 food service, all that. We just wanted to be able to 10 kind of segregate them a little bit from the 11 population, from the pressures, and then slowly 12 reintegrate them back into GP because they're going 13 to have to go there at some point, you can't keep 14 them completely. And the important part of that is 15 that when they have -- if integration is successful 16 they will be able to deal with the pressures that are 17 coming at them when they finally do get released, so 18 to speak, and they do have to deal with those people 19 that are coming out, and that's the reason why we 20 thought aftercare was extremely important because if 21 you are dealing with the challenge, you know, and the 22 inmate goes out in the population and he is getting 23 these pressures to do certain things or be hanging 24 out with certain groups of people, then this way the 25 aftercare portion where they have to see their

1 counselor in their peer support group, which I think 2 is an important understanding, peer support is 3 important to be able to help them, you know, overcome 4 those challenges that they have.

5 MR. KRONE: Thank you.

6 MS. SCHLANGER: I have a question that 7 comes from a couple of conversations with folks who 8 run different kinds of facilities, and one of them
9 from a person running a pretty tough jail said, "If I 10 separate inmates based on what gangs they're in on 11 the outside, I've just declared one housing unit for 12 this gang and one housing unit for that gang, I have 13 created a gang problem in my jail." He said, "I 14 would never do that. I manage the inmates in housing 15 where that's not one of the principles."

16 And then a guy who ran a prison, "Of course 17 I separate them by gang, otherwise they're going to 18 kill each other."

19 These are both pretty well-intentioned, 20 experienced corrections guys, and I wonder your 21 perspective on that issue, the separation of folks
22 when they're incarcerated based on you don't mix 23 gangs that don't get along or whether that actually 24 facilitates gang activity and control over the 25 facility.

1 MR. DELGADO: We don't segregate as far
2 as separating --

3 MS. SCHLANGER: I don't mean segregate, 4 isolating, I just mean separate the one gang from the 5 other gang.

6 MR. DELGADO: Yes. We don't do that,
7 and the reason for that is, again, it gives -- if you 8 are going to have activity going on and you've got 9 all the players together, then that's not going to 10 create, in my opinion, it is not going to create a 11 safer prison.

12 One of the things that we do as an 13 administrative function is that we actually every 14 other month print out a list of the facilities, 15 facilities are responsible for this, looking at the 16 list and seeing where the groupings are in housing 17 and also in jobs. We want to make sure that you 18 don't have too many Crips working in a particular 19 area or too many White Supremacist or Arian
20 Brotherhood members working in a particular area, 21 living in a particular area, because gang members by 22 far are probably the most manipulative type of 23 inmates that you have because they're working 24 together as opposed to the lone inmate out there 25 trying to get a bed moved somewhere. And they tend

1 to manipulate the staff into getting moved to 2 different things, non-smoking program or this 3 program, whatever the case may be. And the thing is, 4 when you group them together you give them power, and 5 the thing that you don't want to do -- that's 6 negative power, you know. As far as when you are 7 dealing, you want to give them a positive approach as 8 opposed to segregating them.

9 The biggest thing that we get are racial 10 separation requests and basically from White 11 Supremacist-type inmates that don't want to cell with 12 anybody other than another white person and we deny 13 them on a regular basis because we don't believe in 14 that approach.

15 MS. SCHLANGER: Do either of you have a 16 different perspective on that or does that pretty 17 much sound like what you think is the way to approach 18 it?

19 DR. BYRNE: I would like the proactive
20 orientation. I guess my view would be to think more 21 about incidents in prisons, not only in the 22 community, hotspots for crime, maybe looking at 23 incidents in that respect in particular to see which 24 subgroup of the population seems to be responsible 25 for the majority of the incidents that come to light

1 and maybe develop some type of strategy. It is a 2 conflict resolution strategy that deals with what 3 these underlying problems are that lead to the 4 conflict, so that's kind of a variation of a
5 restorative justice model and it is a conflict-6 centered approach they're trying in at least one 7 British prison right now, and so my orientation would 8 be to look at hotspots like we do in the communities 9 and try to figure out why we seem to be getting the 10 pattern of behavior we do in certain areas of certain 11 facilities and then to apply a problem-oriented 12 response to those areas and sometimes which might 13 break down to this. Well, gee, let's take a look.
14 We have 15 people responsible for 20 percent of the 15 incidents last month. Okay. These 15, we profiled 16 them all, have significant mental illness problems; 17 what does that suggest. Maybe we need to deal with 18 the underlying mental illness problem here, maybe 19 there will be a gang affiliation. I think more 20 likely you are going to see more general categories 21 of conflict in the areas. You are probably going to 22 talk about conflict resolution. Obviously gangs
23 could part of it but I think it could be something 24 like looking at underlying problems like mental 25 health problems, for example, that might explain why

1 you get the pattern of behavior. It is a little 2 different.

3 JUDGE GIBBONS: The inmates you are 4 dealing with are, the men and women, are social 5 creatures who need social interaction and maybe 6 belonging to groups that they can interact with. Has 7 anybody in the corrections profession considered 8 making available alternative organizations that might 9 be a competing force for gang membership?

10 DR. BYRNE: I think if you look at the 11 work at Graterford Prison, for example, the lifers' 12 programs that have been set up in many institutions, 13 that's the obvious example that comes to my mind for 14 me and this whole idea of the transformation they 15 talk about, so I know at least a few people that are 16 on this commission went to Graterford I think last 17 summer and they did the World Congress on Criminology
18 in Philadelphia, so to me that's one obvious solution 19 to negative gangs, is put together essentially a 20 positive gang, right?

21 When I was a kid it was the Junior Police, 22 don't ask me exactly what they were, but Junior 23 Police, and when my kids were in high school I ran a 24 program that was the AU basketball program that old 25 Professor Byrne here funded through his pocket and

1 definitely spent too money, but that highlighted this 2 whole notion if you want to be part of this program 3 you had to stay in school, at least pass your 4 classes, and that is an alternative to a gang, it is 5 another gang because they were with us all the time
6 and we traveled all over the place. So I agree, 7 that's the kind of thing you do. The examples are 8 few and far between, unfortunately, and certainly the 9 Graterford is one example, I think.

10 MR. ALEJANDREZ: I think also we've had 11 examples already like the Impact Program in Soledad
12 Prison, POPS in Solano, Straight Life in Tracy, there 13 are those programs already in place but they need 14 support, they need to be able to survive. Friends 15 Outside definitely is a group, and then there's 16 cultural and spiritual groups inside the institutions 17 that the individuals themselves try to look out for 18 the youngsters that are coming in so they can direct 19 them to these cultural groups, spiritual groups or 20 vocational groups.

21 I just want to say a little bit in terms of 22 when they want to get out, when they want to get out 23 of the gang. In California, you know, we created a 24 whole special needs yard just for those that are 25 dropping out, getting out of the gangs and stuff, and

1 the population is really, really high. I was at a 2 meeting a couple weeks ago with the sheriff of 3 Salinas in Monterey County and he was saying 4 something that there's been a stronghold for a 5 particular gang there and that he was almost trying 6 to open up a whole unit because there are so many 7 dropouts coming out of that particular gang there and 8 so there is happenings. My concern with that is, and 9 then the briefing process, is the followup. The 10 followup to that is how are those individuals going 11 to be supported to be able to continue. We don't 12 have a very good track record in supporting those 13 programs, so, again I would support a lot of inmate 14 programs that are in there now.

15 JUDGE GIBBONS: Mr. Delgado.

16 MR. DELGADO: I think that when you 17 look at the social grouping, that's important and 18 that's one of the usually things I address when I do 19 training myself. When you are looking at a gang 20 member, you are looking at a social group kind of 21 gone awry, you know, as far as entering into the 22 criminal elements and the activity that goes on with 23 that. In our facilities, each facility has social 24 groupings, organizations, per se. For example, we 25 have Red Cross Chapters, EDA Chapters and different

1 types of chapters within each of our facilities
2 allowing them to participate, do fundraisers, do
3 community service and things like that. One facility
4 I worked at, for example, at Marion has a large focus 5 on faith-based programming and actually where they 6 have created an interfaith dorm where you have 7 Christians living in families and you have Jews
8 living in families, with Muslims living in families, 9 and they practice their faith-based approach, and 10 where you've got Promise Keepers going in there and 11 inmates being able to participate in good social 12 groups, I think that's the important thing. You 13 can't take somebody away from a gang membership
14 without offering them something else. I mean, you 15 know, if you take somebody's car away because it 16 doesn't work, they still need to get to work. So it 17 is important that you give them something else to be 18 able to satisfy whatever that fix is that they need.

19 DR. DUDLEY: Along that line, my 20 question is based in part upon Professor Byrne's 21 comments about identity as being a central issue.
22 Certainly the comments that we have heard today from 23 those who have been previously in gangs and talked 24 about transformation in a variety of ways, from my 25 own experiences with gangs that goes back 30 plus

1 years or so, I want to ask a more basic question.

2 Do we really, do you really think that 3 gangs, or maybe if we are using the word
4 "affiliation" as opposed to "gangs" it doesn't sound 5 so horrible, is bad or is it that the gangs that 6 we're talking about as opposed to other affiliated 7 groups have such a limited sort of set of options for 8 feeling some sort of strength or some sort of 9 identity, and are the programs that we are really 10 talking about those that provide other options, that 11 introduce people to other ways to grow and feel good 12 themselves. What Mr. Brown was talking about 13 earlier, coming into contact with other mature guys, 14 mentors, people who give you another sort of view of 15 things, what you were talking about with regard to 16 cultural transformation, those sorts of things, 17 options that weren't available before that people are 18 introduced to. So is it affiliation that's bad or is 19 it having too limited a set of options for feeling 20 good about yourself that is bad and if you change 21 that, that that matters, that makes a difference.

22 DR. BYRNE: Well, affiliation it itself 23 isn't bad for the individual gang member because for 24 them it is giving them a sense of identity that he 25 didn't otherwise have. And in these worst, the 1 poverty pocket areas that Sampson and some of the 2 other people have been writing about so much

3 recently, these are seriously impoverished areas
4 where there's not a lot of hope and the gangs, in a 5 sense, provide a sense of identity that is not 6 provided in those settings, so the affiliation is 7 giving them something.

8 Now the second part of it is can we do
9 something about that. Someone made the comment 10 earlier we can't solve the problems of the community 11 within the prison setting but I think they're linked 12 and you have to talk about providing alternatives, 13 not just within prisons, and I think you heard some 14 good examples of that, but also in the community as 15 well, and that's difficult and that's where people 16 writing about how to improve collective advocacy at 17 the community level, improve informal social 18 controls, I think you can take some of those lessons 19 learned and apply them to institutional settings as 20 well. That's where having some type of conflict 21 resolution panel mechanism that's inmate-empowered 22 and run provides that type of informal social control 23 mechanism within the setting. But, you know, you are 24 right, it is a difficult problem, but I don't know if 25 I want to use good or bad in terms of the affiliation

1 because for the individual, if you are seeing it 2 through their eyes, they're gaining something that 3 we're not giving them.

4 DR. DUDLEY: I'm responding to some of 5 our discussion that was suggesting that gangs in and 6 of themselves were bad. I wanted to ask that 7 question. And part of I guess what's going through 8 my head too is that if that sort of transformation 9 can happen, if the program is designed to foster that 10 sort of transformation inside institutions, when 11 people do return and can bring that back to the 12 community, and that contributes to change there as 13 well if that kind of transformation is possible, 14 people can change, which some of our speakers seemed 15 to be suggesting is possible.

16 DR. BYRNE: But part of affiliation is 17 how long are you going to stay in the gang. I think 18 if you look at the research on desistance through a 19 life course, what they are saying is people 20 essentially grow out of gangs. I don't know if you 21 want to comment on that, but they get married, they 22 have things, they get relationships, so they can't go 23 out over here tonight, they have to be at home here, 24 and that's a change in terms of just basic activities 25 that relates to stability. So to the extent that we

1 can work on things in institutions that will lead to 2 a more stable person leaving the institution, then 3 you might have an impact on desistance down the road
4 independent of what's going on in the community
5 because maybe they will get involved in more stable 6 relationships as a result of some of the things you 7 work on in an institutional setting.

8 MR. MAYNARD: We have time for one more
9 question, Mr. Nolan.

10 MR. NOLAN: I have heard about a 11 program in Ohio called Opening Doors that started at 12 in Marion and apparently has gone to others that 13 teaches conflict resolution skills to the inmates and 14 I'm even told the COs saw the change so much that 15 they wanted it themselves. Could you tell us about 16 that, are you familiar with Opening Doors?

17 MR. DELGADO: Yes, a little bit.
18 Actually when I left that prison is when they were 19 starting to work on that. They've got other programs 20 there such as Kairos, Kairos programming goes into 21 that facility on a regular basis, Opening Doors. And 22 actually what I saw at that prison was an actual 23 culture change with the staff and, in return, that 24 also affected the inmates that were at that facility 25 too, and to the point where they were, people were

1 changing and trying to do some positive things.
2 That's not to say the entire population bought into 3 it staff and inmate wise, but they have offered some 4 different things to staff. Actually Marion is one of 5 the more progressive institutions that actually takes 6 a look at their staff and tries to provide additional 7 assistance through employee activities and things 8 like that that other institutions do not.

9 I can tell you, that wasn't the first 10 prison I worked at, that was the second one, and the 11 difference in mind set of the facility, you can feel 12 when you go to the prison kind of the culture, and it 13 was completely different from the prison I worked at 14 before. And one of the things that they do focus on 15 there is staff and as far as conflict resolution and 16 things like that. And I think when you get the staff 17 on board there, that will translate down to the 18 inmates. Somebody commented about that earlier, it 19 is actually changing the entire culture, and that's a 20 good example of a prison that has done that.

21 MR. MAYNARD: I want to thank all of 22 you for your testimony today, it has been very 23 helpful, and we are going to break now for lunch and 24 we will come back at 1:15. Thank you very much.
