

14. Delian League and the trireme

HIST 332

Spring 2012

Aftermath of the Persian Wars

The old system of mutually exclusive, independent poleis no longer worked

– was freedom of Greece as a whole compatible with freedoms of disparate city-states?

A single polis was needed to lead:

- Sparta (logical choice) was protective and insular
 - could not be away from farms too long
- Athens had resources and was located logically to continue the defense

Chronology of Athenian Imperialism

478 Delian League forms

- trouble with Allies of League
- trouble with Sparta's League

461 Age of Pericles begins

– "Long Walls" construction begins (461-445)

460-46 The "First" Peloponnesian War

- Thucydides born (460)
- Delos treasury moved to Athens (454)
- Parthenon construction begins (447-432)

From Voluntary League to Empire

460s Delian League has 200 members

- led by Cimon
- Over time fiscal burdens onerous
- some island poleis ask to leave Delian League
 - Athens refuses to allow them
 - Rebellions forcibly put down

468 Naxos

- enslaved, forced to tear down its walls, lose its fleet and its vote in the League

465 Thasos

- After two years Thasos surrendered to the Athenian leader Cimon
- fortification walls were torn down

Origins of war with Sparta

Earthquake

464 BCE helot revolt in Sparta

- Spartans summoned forces from all of their allies to help suppress the revolt
 - including Athens
- Athens sent out a sizable contingent (4,000 Hoplites)
 - on arrival, Sparta dismisses Athenian force permitting the other allies to remain

According to Thucydides, the Spartans feared the Athenians would switch sides and support the helots

- The offended Athenians repudiated their alliance with Sparta
 - Athenians settled dispossessed helots at a strategic city of on the Corinthian Gulf

Delian & Peloponnesian League ca. 460

Athens Takes Advantage

Change in Athenian foreign policy

- Athens neglects alliance with the Spartans and instead ally with her enemies:
 - Megara defects to Delian League
 - Argos also joins Athens

454 Athens moves Delian treasury to Athens

- facade of equity between members broken

Athens becomes an Island

- "Age of Pericles"
 - safe within the "Long Walls"
